The Ship Philip Tabb. 4th 1834
To a lady, in whose society the writer has Spent a Summer,

My days have ceased to be pleasant, Madam, since I have ceased to enjoy the continual delights of your society, where shall I seek for the charms, which your amiable disposition diffuses around you, the cool shade, under which you discoursed so agreeably on the enjoyments of a peaceful life, and the advantages of solitude, those charming conversations, in which you astonished me by the brilliancy of your wit, displayed all the benevolence of your heart in the beauty of your maxims, Dear Nancy but I console myself with the thought, that you will sometimes dign to remember me; and I sincerely hope that your joy may be equal to the regret, which I feel on account of your absence Sam and Sophy

I am, Benjamin Mucamher
Of Bilits, Instruction,

Mr. C. Has just gained his suit by unanimous decision of the court he owes the first news of this to Mrs. D. who has digned to take so deep an interest in his case, he begs her to accept the homage of his respectful regard

To, Your, Respected Friend

From A Daughte to her mother Ship Philip Tabb May the 20th 1834^{AD}

Dear Mother I cannot Express the bitterness of my soul, my dear mother, ever since I left you what what a moment was that in which which we separated, how full was my heart, how sorrowful to live a part from each other, when we are so happy together: I am continually sick for you, and I feel that I am destitute of every thing, because I am deprived of your presence, the agreeable recollections of past times, will render my present situation more painful until I shall have become more accustomed at it, but I shall never be so much reconciled to it as not to desire most passionately to see and to embrace you I hope for no consolation but in your letters, which will revive my grief no separation ~~was~~ ^{so} great was ever so gloomy as ours: we did not say a word to each other adieu my dear mother pity me that I have left you ~ ~ ~

Dear Is A Line Or two I want you to read but when you read it you will think of me ~ ~ ~ O they wandered side by side in many a quiet place and with growns of hope and pride, gazed upon her face) it due for ever more at until I reach the shore And to Benjamin Macomber ~ ~ ~

To A Friend on his marriage Sir

I am delighted, to hear of your marriage. you have found A lady of virtue and beauty, distinguished by her talents and accomplishments, and you have preferred her good character and personal charms to the advantage of augmenting your rank and fortune. heaven will not fail to annex A blessing to your wise moderation, and will enable you to find A satisfaction unknown to A frivolous world in the society of an amiable and exemplary woman, attached to you by considerations of gratitude, she will live for you only, and will find her chief happiness in anticipating the least of your wishes A matrimonial union formed under such auspices, must be attended with prosperity, but however great its benefits may be, they will never surpass the desires of A him, who has the pleasure of Subscribing himself Your Friend

Letters of Belits
Mrs. P. presents her best compliments to Mrs. C. and the young ladies; she hopes they have reached home in safety, and are now recovered from the fatigues of A party, which was, indebted for its brilliancy chiefly A to their charms, their graces, and their talents, and so of which

To A Protector

Sir

It is impossible for me to suffer your festival to pass by, without rendering the homage of my respect and gratitude due to receive it with your characteristic benevolence. what wish can I form for you, your virtues, and your fortune require no addition: your personal reputation surpasses that which is due to the eminent public stations which you occupy, can I desire any thing better than the continuance of these rare advantages, As for me, my ambition is limited to the wish of enjoying your continued benevolence and the honour of your protection I am Co Yours affectionate

Dear Mother
I have been thinking of you very much and wondering how you are getting on.
I hope you are well and happy.
I have been very busy lately but I will write to you soon.
